

CINDY FOLKERS focuses on radiation and health and renewable energy alternatives to nuclear power. Prior to joining Beyond Nuclear, she served as the radiation and health specialist at Nuclear Information and Resource Service. Cindy communicates with members of the public, U.S. Congress, and national and international agencies on radiation and health regulation and science, climate change, and U.S. energy legislation. She is a member of a new international delegation working to establish hearings on the health impacts of nuclear power and nuclear weapons development and use. She has traveled and spoken at public meetings, conferences and academic symposia. Cindy grew up in Florida.
