15:51:58 From Linda Lewison to Everyone : Mike, could you give evidence to support your statement that "within 5 years the lake will eat the plants."
15:54:52 From Kevin Kamps to Everyone : On one of my record high Lake Michigan water level slides, I mentioned some of such risks: severe erosion for the past year+; meteotsunamis on Lake Michigan (formerly known as "rogue large waves"); seiches (wind-blown flooding) along Great Lakes shorelines. To that list could be added the risk of sand dune blow outs due to high winds at Palisades, the risk of an earthquake allowing the Lake to flood the site, etc.
15:56:45 From Ann Behrmann to Everyone : <https://thebulletin.org/2021/03/fukushima-10-years-later-it-still-could-happen-here/>
15:59:29 From Jesse Deer In Water, CRAFT< He/Him to Everyone : <https://www.freep.com/story/news/local/michigan/2020/07/17/great-lakes-water-levels-records-erosion-damage/5450910002/>
16:00:01 From Kevin Kamps to Everyone : The White Hurricane of 1913 sent a 40-foot wall of water into the Port of Goodrich, Ontario. Palisades' Western dry cask storage pad is just 150 yards, or less, from the waters of Lake Michigan.

16:08:41 From Kevin Kamps to Everyone : A number of bills on Capitol Hill would authorize and/or appropriate funds for Yucca Mountain, Nevada, and/or Consolidated Interim Storage Facilities in Texas and/or New Mexico. We oppose those bills, and urge Members of Congress to do the same.
16:10:20 From Kevin Kamps to Everyone : Mustafa Ali, former head of EJ at EPA during the Obama administration, and now head of EJ at National Wildlife Federation, pointed out the EJ burden of the high-level radioactive waste shipments to such dumps – low income and/or people of color communities live along many of those roads, rails, and waterways. He did so on Democracy Now! in Sept. 2019.

16:11:20 From Kevin Kamps to Everyone : Our names for these high-risk shipments include: Mobile Chernobyl; Floating Fukushima; Dirty Bombs on Wheels; Mobile X-ray Machines That Can't Be Turned Off
